

We Catholics have a long-standing tradition of working for social justice along side of our non-Christian and non-Catholic brothers and sisters. These mutual efforts in no way detract from the authentic teaching of the Church or from the practice of the faith.

In a time of great political polarization in our country, we cannot allow these differences to affect our efforts at serving the poor and marginalized through the work of the Catholic Campaign for Human Development.

In these difficult economic times, we need to be more generous than ever in supporting the work of justice. I urge all my brother and sister Catholics and people of good will to give and give generously to the collection for the National Catholic Campaign for Human Development.
